Importance of Public Libraries to the Country's School System.

MIGHTY FACTOR IN INTELLECTUAL LIFE

An Expert's Views on Library Management and the Improvements Possible in Equipment and Methods.

William Howard Brett, librarian of the Meveland public library, discusses in the independent various measures calculated to in crease the usefulness of public libraries. The free public library, he writes, is as definitely an educational institution as the free public schools. Together they form the equipment provided by the whole people ucting together provided by the whole people acting together ply the books which people come for, or for the education of themselves and their even information upon the various subjects onlider in the duties of citizenship. For that are asked for, although these things this reason they have found their origin and their greatest development in free lands possible, to instruct its readers in among free peoples. It is only by shaping the use of books, in the art of every detail of organization and method toward this educational purpose and by making them consistent with this spirit of freedom their greatest development in free lands them consistent with this spirit of freedom that the library may hope to attain its greatest usefulness.

The motto of the American Library asso

clation probably expresses the purpose of the modern free library as well as it is pos-"The best reading for the greatest number at the lowest cost." The quality of its work, the extent of its field and the necessity of good business methods in its management are all implied in these few words. Expressed more fully, the purpose of the library is to bring within reach of all for whose benefit it is established and to ussist them in selecting and using those books which will be best for them. It begins with those pupils in our public schools who have just acquired the ability to distinguish the words on the printed page and leads them into storyland where reading soon becomes to them, to use the words of one of our most loved and most successful librarians, not merely "an art learned, but a delight dis-covered." It goes with the pupil through a! the different grades to the day of graduation, lending a glow of romance to the pages of history, extending the information of the text book of geography, by travelers true tales and giving additional fulness and richness to the studies of the entire course. Its work bears upon all the important inter ests of life. It supplies information in regard to the mechanic arts and business; aids in preparation for the duties of citizen-ANSAS CITY ST JOSEPH

STRICTLY EDUCATIONAL. All of this work is educational in the broadest and truest sense. The importance of it, its wonderful possibilities, impose a great responsibility upon those to whom our ibraries are intrusted.

The management of the library includes the selection of the books, their classification and cataloging, the arrangements for the housing, safe-keeping and use, the provisions for the comfort and convenience those using the library and the assistance given to them.

The governing body of each library is selected and the library is intrusted to them, in order that they may adopt such plans as may enable the library best to perform the educational work for which it is intended They are responsible to the people for the honesty and efficiency with which they do his. The case does not differ whether the ibrary is supported by taxation or is wholly or partly endowed for public use. The purpose is the same and the responsibility is the same.

By this very reeponsibility they may bliged to disregard individual requests, or even clamorous urgency for the purchase of certain books, or the employment of certain methods, if, after consideration, these do not appear best for the purposes of the library. SELECTION OF BOOKS. The duty of the library board in select ing books for the library, although it may seem to be quite different, is essentially the same as that of the school authorities selecting text books for the to govern our schools, put the selection of the text books for the children into its hands and abide by its decision. In the other case we, as citizens, select a body to gov-ern our library, the institution which is to the whole community what the school is to the children, put the selection of books into its hands and abide by its decision. In the case of the school board it will seek the best expert advice in the selection of the text books, but, naturally, will not consult those who are to use the books. On the other hand the library board will often find its best advisers, as to the value of books, among those who use the library. SOHEMES OF CLASSIFICATION. Classification and cataloging have been de-reloped and systematized during the last twenty-five years, so that the librarian who no whas before him the pleasant task of organizing a library may select from three Tweitth or more schemes of classification, any one Street of which will be satisfactory. When the Mediater users of the library are permitted to select from the shelves a closer classification is particularly desirable. REFORMS POSSIBLE.

I believe that the practice of requiring unquestionable guaranties from readers and it the entire ateam eagine plant of 3,000 of excluding them from the shelves, which prevails in many of our libraries, is an inheritance from an earlier time which we may well outgrow. I have then, defined the purpose and have indicated briefly the equipment and methods which appear advisable to enable a modern public library best to fulfill that purpose. What I have said applies in the main only to the work of the library is supplying looks, either for home or library use, to those who come to the library for them. The progressive modern library, however, do much more than merely to supform much the largest part of its work. In addition, however, to this it aims, so far as terdant has, probably, the book he wanted. The reader who has the privilege of selecting that book for himself from the shelves devoted to the subject, has the book also plus a glimpse of library classification, a suggestion of the relation of the subject in which he is interested to other subjects and a consideration as extended and careful as he cares to make it, of the literature of the sub-ject of his inquiry, which may be a revelation to him. He will sometimes find that some other book than the one he asked for will better meet his peeds. He is likely to take something of valuable suggestion or information in addition to the book which he carries away under his arm. Opportunity is also offered and suggestions made as to the use of catalogues, indexes and reference

HELPFUL SUGGESTIONS.

It is well worth while in the library to supply the book or the information which is asked for and in many cases it is the only thing to do. It is much better, how-ever, particularly in the case of young men and women, of hove and girls, to give them the opportunity to use the books, with such suggestions as to indexes and catalogues as may enable them to learn to help themselves. There is no mystery about catalogues, inlexes or reference books which cannot be mastered by any person of ordinary intelli gence; and one who gives a moderate amount of attention to it will find a new world opened to him. Each bit of research on the part of each library assistant should be so indexed as to be available for all.

By the wise selection of books, by annotated catalogues and references to reviews, and more than all by the personal influence of its assistant the library strives to en-courage the reading of better books. There is, of course, no thought of any authoritative direction of the reading, but it must be altogether unobtrusive, mainly bits of personal suggestion or advice, given quietly as between friends. The influence for good of competent library assistants who gain the confidence of readers may be great, and still it will be so quiet as hardly to be noticed.

The library will be made useful to the arious literary clubs and guilds. In one library the programs of the literary clubs. some twenty in number, are secured as promptly as possible and kept on file in a place set apart for them. A little box to hold catalogue cards is also provided for each club and the references to the subject are looked up carefully and filed, each in its own box. This is understood by the members of the club, who usually come in and look up for themselves the subject in which they are interested. The same attention will be given to any organization whose work may be facilitated by it. The list for the present winter includes the program of one Sunday school class, whose teacher is giving a series of lessons on the lives of the great skeptics. Meeting rooms may well be furnished in the library building for such clubs, and by arranging the time of meeting of the differ ent clubs with reference to each other a few rooms might provide for a large num-

It should be the home of all the educa-tional work of the city which is beyond and outside of the schools and colleges.

I have thus far spoken only of the work which the library may do within its own walls. Space will not permit me to describ the extension of the work of the library of our large cities through branches and de-livery stations, the direct work in the schools, the formation of mothers' clubs and of home libraries, the Library league, which can and the bull pup were banished, where enlists the children to help care for the books, nor the great value of the commer- and the pug are put outside the pale, and

It is a profound study of the genealogy of flowering plants, tracing their line of ancestors not through books of heraldry, but from the records of the rocks-from the hidden mysteries of plant birth and from the race resemblances of plant faces. It is a fact presented in the address that velopment of an individual plant from conand old age is a miniature history of the plant's ancestors. Pupils Miss Catherine Foos, one of the teachers in the fourth grade at the Comenius school, is utilizing the public library to a very considerable and successful degree in the course of her work. Her method involves a good deal of additional labor, but the results have been so excellent that the time she has thus spent has been amply repaid her.

A good many of the teachers advise their scholars to use the public library, but it ordinarily ends by simply suggesting the books the children should draw. Miss Foos, however, goes farther. Once every month she goes to the library building and spends several hours among the shelves in personally selecting the books she desires her these are conveyed by the school supply wagon and left at her room. During the next thirty days the books are circulated among the scholars in the room and are then carried back to the library. Another batch f forty, again selected by Miss Foos, is brought back. There is considerable work involved in the election of forty new and proper books each nonth, but Miss Foos has the satisfaction eading. The plan is unquestionably to the dvantage of the children.

Miss Catherine Foos has almost ready for publication her book of primary reading, which she has been compiling. Some of which she has been compiling. Some of the material has been submitted to Alice W. Cooly, superintendent of the primary work in the Minneapolis schools, and bas been highly commended by her. The book is to be used in public schools.

Cost of Canning Material. It is noted in a recent issue of the Baltimore Trade, in a discussion of our canning industry, that not a lifetime ago "empty tip came sold for more than the filled ones today, even in carload lots." Twenty years ago cans cost twice what they now do. Both the cans and the tomatoes put in them have failen greatly in price, but the cars most of all, on account of the increased machinery in their manufacture. A dozen years ago the contract price of tomatoes was 39 cents a bushel, and in the past year about 15 cents—a comparatively small decline. The camning business is done nowadays, it seems, on a very narrow margin of profit. CASTORIA. CASTORIA. CASTORIA.
